David Yeshiwas
Intern

Biography

David received a Bachelor of Arts in Political Science from University of California, Davis, where he also completed a minor in Environmental Policy Analysis and Planning. While pursuing his interests in politics and law, he discovered his passion for conservation and environmental advocacy and continues to develop his expertise in those areas.

David began his journey into environmental policy as a research intern at Environment California. He testified at committee hearings, collaborated with legislative representative offices on various bills, and gained significant experience in bill tracking and political canvassing. He brings these skills to the CPSC team and helps assist with projects that promote extended producer responsibility and product stewardship in areas such as pharmaceuticals, solar panels, and more.

A native of greater San Francisco, David enjoys running, yoga, playing music, and learning new ways to reduce his environmental impacts.
