Christine Wolfe
Biography

Christine Wolfe is the Government Relations Manager at Recology, an employee-owned resource recovery company serving communities across California, Oregon, and Washington. She oversees legislative and regulatory advocacy for the company, advocating for policies that shift our disposal models towards recovery and reuse. She supports Recology’s operations, environmental, and outreach teams in implementing statewide regulatory programs. In this role, she has advocated for policies to advance responsible product stewardship models that bring stakeholders across a product’s lifecycle to the table. She is interested in developing programs in which manufacturers, communities, waste haulers, recyclers, and composters can work in partnership to safely and responsibly divert materials from landfill towards productive uses.

Christine also serves as a Director for the Northern California chapter of the Solid Waste Association of North America. Through SWANA, she is the Young Professional Representative for California and the Pacific Basin, working with universities to develop curriculum and foster student engagement in the resource recovery industry.

Christine graduated from Harvard College with a degree in Neurobiology (but prefers garbage).
